I choose to rent in the central city because I have always preferred to be right amongst the action. Its close to work so no travel or travel costs. I pay $480 p/week but I have free access to a gym and pool and power is included. Although even if power wasn't included this is close to to going rate for a "one bedroom". Even before March 2020 there were always major construction going on in Auckland city. I daily powerwalk around the whole city and without a word of a lie there would be a new construction project going on daily. Auckland should not be called 'the city of sails' but "Cone city!" Over time this can really weigh on a person. To step outside your front door assaulted by construction, trucks, roadwork signs, barriers, noise etc...

What I have noticed in the last so many years is construction sites getting bolder and taking over public side walks. A lot of the time its to use that space to set up their offices (make shift) or put picnic tables to have their breaks on. So for the next 2 or so years the public or the taxpayer is forced to a single lane path with no room for other people, scooters, bikes, people in wheelchairs mothers/fathers with prams. They are flout out self fish and inconsiderate, basically they don't give a ~~shit~~!

A lot of times you will have scaffolding put up outside a shop on the pavement and there is no work going on, for like a year and no one follows up on it. You could walk a few minutes down a street to be stop by a construction worker who talk you, you need to go back to the lights a cross to the other side because they don't have to consideration to put a sign up at the beginning of the street to direct you to cross here. There is the construction signs all around the surrounding area taking up all the sidewalk space so you are forced to step out into live traffic because of a giant sign that no one pays attention to its just to cover the construction site. God forbid if your in a wheel chair, you have no chance! I do not agree we need another hotel to go up in that space. The historical Palace Hotel was pulled down to make way for an "upmarket super hotel" that was close to sky city. This turned out to be an ugly apartment block whose balconies are used by the tenants, like floating storage units.

The huge lack of thoughtfulness in regards to the presentation of this city is hugely lacking. We do not need more concrete poured on concrete. This project will be another isor and inconvenience for the tax payer. Plus your right next door to hotels and we are meant to be spending the next five years rebuilding our tourist industry. If you want to know first hand email me and I will personally take you on a local tour. Thank you for your comments of Auckland and you can see for yourself why this project is unnecessary. Please excuse all spellings and grammar mistakes.

Sincerely,

JARRAD FARLOW.
